Mr. Craxi told reporters as he left a meeting at the Quirinale presidential palace that he would begin negotiations Friday with other po-hical parties for a coalition. If he is successful, Mr. Craxi will be Italy's first Socialist prime minister and only the second person from outside the Christian Democratic Party to hold the position since World War II. The negotiations will be aimed at forming a government, following last month's general election in which the traditionally dominant Christian Democrats suffered beavily.

All the parties concerned have indicated they have no objection in principle to the calling and the calling an principle to the realization of Mr. Craxi's stated ambition to become prime minister, provided sharp diferences over economic policies are settled first.

Mr. Spadolini, whose party almost doubled its share of the vote, to 5 percent in the election, said Thursday that he believed the prime minister-designate would complete his talks on the makeup of a government quickly. He has said he could accept Mr. Craxi. Mr. Craxi, 49, a Milanese intellectual, was named prime minister-designate once before, in 1979. But, after 17 days of talks, the Christian Democrats blocked his attempt to lead a government

Sources in the Christian Democratic Party said a Craxi premier-ship would have to be based on the strict economic austerity favored by the party to tackle Italy's 16 percent inflation rate.

The sources said the party's leader, Cirieco de Mita, had made it clear in a meeting Mr. Pertini that Mr. Craxi might be

The Christian Democrats' share of the vote fell to 32.9 percent from 38.3 percent in the election. The Socialists made slight gains to take 11.4 percent, while the Communist vote fell marginally to 29.9 percent. Smaller parties took the rest. The five-party coalition favored by Mr. Craxi would hold 366 seats in the 630-member chamber. Mr. Craxi was unexpectedly called for a second meeting with Mr. Pertini Thursday evening after the president finished a second day of formal consultations with party leaders aimed at finding a suitable candidate. Throughout the week indications grew that he would pick Mr. Craxi, as all the Socialists' potential coalition partners hinted that they would be prepared to serve under "The crisis ought to find a rapid and convincing solution," Mr. Craxi said as he left. Italy has had a caretaker government under Mr. Fantani since the election. Mr. Craxi repeated his wish to form an administration able to provide stable government.

U.S. Recovery Gains Speed

WASHINGTON - The U.S. economy grew at an 8.7-percent annual rate in the second quarter, the fastest pace in more than two years, the government reported Thursday. At his news conference, Presiden Ronald Reagan hailed the latest figures on the gross national product, saying "vigorous growth is the surest route to more jobs."

Israel's new role, which the United States did not wish to publicize, was disclosed by a foreign source. Sandinist leaders called for The information was confirmed by

An Israeli diplomat who asked not to be identified denied that there had been any change in Israel's role as an arms supplier in Central America. He said Israeli activities were unrelated to the policies of the United States. However, U.S. officials, in confirming Israel's cooperation, said it ment of !sraeli-U.S. relations, which had been cool in the first half of the Reagan administration. Another, more visible, reason for the improvement was Israel's agreement earlier this year to negotiate a security agreement with Lebanon and its pledge to withdraw its forces from Lebanon if Syria and the PLO did the same.

Administration officials said Israel is assisting the United States in Central America for several reasons, including the opportunity to oppose the Soviet Union, to combat reported PLO support for Nicaragua and to expand the market

U.S. officials said that the Reagan administration, concerned about congressional limitations on involvement in Central America, had encouraged the Israeli activities as a means of supplementing American security assistance to friendly governments.

In addition, the officials said, the administration wanted to establish new lines of support to Nicaraguan rebels in case Congress approved legislation that would cut off covert support for the insurgents, who now number about 10,000 troops. Honduras, according to adminis-

Rainstorms in China Moving North

BEIJING (Renters) — The Hwang Ho, or Yellow River, which swelled dangerously earlier this month, was becoming more threatening Timusday as storms approached, but the flooding danger in the Yangtze Valley receded as the rain moved north.

The New China News Agency said Thursday night that the rain, which has brought severe flooding to the Yangtze Valley, killing more than 100 people, was sweeping across a wide area of central and northwestern China.

It was expected to bit the upper reaches of the Hwang Ho and the Hua River valley and other areas north of the Yangtze, the agency added. Heavy rains since the beginning of the month have hit all seven Yangtze provinces, swelling the river above the record levels of 1954, when

Pope Again Appeals for Girl's Release

ROME — Pope John Paul II issued a new ples Thursday for kidnep-pers to spare the life of a Vatican employee's daughter and to give up their "unfeasible" demand that Mehmet Ali Agea, the Turk who shot the pope in May 1981, be released from prison.

The appeal for the life of Emannela Orlandi, 15, came hours after a deadline of midnight Wednesday set by the abductors. There was no word on the girl's fate, but police stepped up their investigation, reinter-viewing witnesses, checking cars near the Vatican and searching the Tiber

"The Holy Father directs a deep felt, pressing appeal to those responsi-ble for the fate of the young girl," the pope said in a statement. He called on her abductors "to restore her unharmed to her loved ones without posing conditions they know to be unfeasible." It was the pontiff's fifth public appeal for the release of the girl, who has been missing since June 22.

WASHINGTON -The Reagan administration has quietly dropped a contingency plan for a $130-billion tax increase that President Ronald Reagan had asked Congress to enact this year to take effeet late in 1985, according to several officials.

The chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, Dan Rostenkowski, Democrat of Illinois, signaled Wednesday that without presidential support it was unlikely that Congress would ap-

Failure of Congress to pass a tax bill would mean it would not comply with the 1984 congressional budget resolution calling for an increase in revenue of $73 billion over three years. Projected budget deficits would be higher without the additional revenue.

Tax writers in Congress say it would take an increase in interest rates later in the summer, while Congress is in recess, to reignite fears that U.S. budget deficits were enough of a threat to the recovery to get Congress to act despite the ident's opposition.

Administration officials agree that an interest rate "spike" could produce a change in congressional sentiment by autumn. It would take "a panic about the deficit," a

DETROIT - After years of decline, crime in Detroit is again on the rise, and the mayor's plans to curb it are bringing protests from civil libertarians.

But delinquency charges against juveniles were up 13 per-cent in the first five months of this year, and the city's criminal court reports more cases against youths under 18 than at any time since the city's riots in 1967.

So far, fewer than 40 young people have been charged with plating the curiew, according to the Police Department.

Among major U.S. cities, Chicago, Los Angeles and Philadelphia also have youth curiews, alselective. New York has none.

Explaining his economic poli-cies, Mr. Berenger noted that Man-ritus has a public debt of about $700 million and said, "Right now we are a colony of the IMF and the World Bank, and we'll remain so for a number of years until we get back our independence through sheer work."

Last fall in Washington, he nego-tiated a $45-million loan from the World Bank and worked out a standby loan from the IMF for about $60 million.

Congress and the IMF

There are three compelling reasons for Congress to vote an $8.4-billion increase in America's contribution to the IMF:

(1) It will help developing countries whose debts are dragging them down.

(2) It will strengthen the international financial system, shaken by the debt crisis.

(3) It will help the United States. Some 40 percent of American exports are bought by the developing countries. The increase would help bolster their economies and thus their ability to buy. And it would relieve the particular burden that the debt crisis puts on this country as the world's financial leader.

Quick action is called for. Even if other countries also increase their contributions accordingly, the fund will not be able to cover all the demands that are being made on its re-sources. And until the United States puts up its share, the other countries will hold back.

Despite the urgency, the IMF bill has become a hostage. Its captors span the political spectrum from people who want to punish overextended private banks to those who want to punish South Africa. All are trying to work their causes into the bill. The Democratic-controlled House wants to use it as leverage for Republican support for housing and other social legislation. The Republican Senate has loaded the bill with restrictive amendments of mixed merit; most would impose stiffer regulation on banks' for-eign lending, some warranted and some not, but the bill also includes totally inappropriate protection for domestic mining companies. The House is on the verge of voting on a much more restrictive version.

All this maneuvering has slowed the legislation -indeed, has endangered the functioning of the IMF just when it is most needed. Member countries borrow from it when they lack foreign exchange earnings to cover imports and foreign debt. The IMF gives the aid only if the country takes steps — which are often politically unpopular — to get its accounts back in balance and its economy back in shape. Even the United States has borrowed, but now the borrowers are Third World countries devastated by the collapse of commodity prices and the rise in interest on their debt.

The important thing is not to fight over details of the House bill but to get it moving getting approval first and then working to remove bad features in the House-Senate conference. Mustering a House majority will not be easy. There is still a large isolationist group, particularly among Republicans, who tend to oppose multinational agencies.

Beyond those sentiments, members of both parties are concerned about the appearance of voting $8.4 billion to bail out foreigners and banks while domestic social programs are cut back. This political point is hard to refute with rational argument, but there is one. Not shoring up the IMF could cost far more in direct aid for stricken countries and weakened banks than passing a responsible bill now.

That Immigration Bill

The Simpson-Mazzoli immigration reform bill, which has been passed twice by the Senate, is at a critical stage in the House. Five committees have considered the bill and four have issued reports. Predictably, the interests represented on those committees vary greatly. Agriculture wants to ensure the availability of foreign workers to harvest crops. Education and Labor has a primary concern for preserving the jobs of Americans. Next it was up to the Rules Committee to devise an orderly method for dealing with these diverse interests, organizing a plan for floor votes on all important issues and averting the kind of nit-picking that killed the bill in the House last year.

There are fewer than half a dozen major areas of disagreement on this bill, with two or three alternatives proposed in each case. The most important is employer sanctions, for unless these are preserved and made effective the main purpose of the bill will be destroyed. Disputes over record-keeping, penalties and potential discrimination can be settled with a few votes. Similarly, the date of the proposed amnesty for illegal aliens already in the country is easily determined. The question of for-eign agricultural workers is a hot one, but the ing each alternative easily identified. Finally, in the category of major disagreements is the question of whether an overall ceiling on legal immigration should be imposed, as the Senate-passed bill requires. A single roll call can settle that straightforward matter.

It would not be difficult for the Rules Committee to send the bill to the floor with either a time limit or a plan limiting amendments to these major areas. Immigration reform is badly needed and has been exhaustively studied in the executive and legislative branches and by a blue-ribbon select commission. Good momenturn was achieved earlier this year when the Senate passed a bill, 76-18. All relevant House committees have had an opportunity to review the bill and to propose amendments. If it is delayed through the summer, that momentum begins to erode. As election year approaches, action on this politically sensitive question becomes less likely. It is time for the House Democratic leadership to get the bill to the floor, and it is possible to do so under conditions that will allow debate and orderly decision without either chaos or stalemate.

Other Opinion

London on Central America.

We agree entirely with the Reagan administration's aim to counter Soviet-backed Cuban subversion. But it can be questioned whether 'showing the flag" with a powerful naval force cruising up and down off the Nicaragnan coast will be much use. The only way to stop arms getting into the region from Cuba would be to impose an all-out blockade. This the administration says it does not intend to do.

No one should belittle the Reagan administration's efforts to grapple with what is a very real problem in Central America, Mr. Reagan is entirely right in pointing out that the empha sis must be on economic and social progress, not on a purely military solution. But without a military counter to attempted Communist takeovers, as is happening in El Salvador, nothing else will be possible.

- The Daily Telegraph.

The small wars of Central America are swiftly developing into a conflagration of major proportions — and the United States administration, by its every action, seems intent on heaping more fuel on the flames. This week's decision to send a battle fleet down the Pacific coast from California to patrol the waters off Guatemala, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua, coupled with an earlier scheme to establish a large American military base at Puerto Castilla on the Atlantic shores of Honduras, is a further frightening indication that the United States is still toying with apocalyptic military solutions.

The challenge to the United States, the challenge that should (but will not) be examined by the Kissinger commission on Central America. is not one posed by Cuban or Soviet subversion. It is a question asked of the United States itself. How can it learn to live in peace in its own hemisphere with people who are waking up to the fact that their condition of oppression - for which the United States bears some historic and present responsibility — is not forever immutable? The United States can adapt to change, or seek to resist it. It cannot — even with the Marines — prevent it. --- The Guardian.

The crisis of Central America in the eyes of President Reagan's administration is not a crisis which springs from the squabbles and instabilities of four or five small countries in the Central American isthmus. It is where that crisis might lead which troubles the administration. It is the specter of a Castroite Mexico.

One does not have to agree entirely with the imministration's assumption that Mexico is bound to be destabilized by revolutionary successes in Nicaragua and possibly El Salvador to see that, should that occur, it would present a major strategic nightmare for the United States. It may seem a distant threat to Europeans. They may argue that President Reagan is guilty of the simplest form of geopolitics. However they should not forget that half the supplies destined for NATO in an emergency would originate from ports in the Mexica Gulf, and that, as the Falklands emergency almost showed, when the interests of hemisphere and the interests of Atlantic allies compete for attention in Washington, the hemisphere may have the advantage.

Is America Splitting Again?

Still torn from the divisive days of the Vietnam war, the United States seems in some danger of once again splitting into two and then into fragments. Its government and peo-ple are arguing over whether there is a commu-nist threat to Central America. Those who agree that there is are arguing over its source and over what Washington should do about it.

1908: Japanese Worry China

SHANGHAI - The reinstatement of the Katsura Ministry in Tokio has alarmed Peking statesmen on account of the intensely jingo views of the Premier, who is a veritable incarnation of the war spirit which precipitated the conflict with Russia. This feeling of alarm is intensified by the change for the worse in the relations of the Chinese with Japanese officials at Mukden, where a violent conflict has arisen over the Yalu forestry question, the Japanese baving preferred impossible claims and having openly threatened the Chinese delegates when the latter refused to entertain them. The dispute was terminated by the abrupt withdrawal of the Japanese delegate.

1933: Roosevelt's Code for Labor

WASHINGTON - In the midst of a crisis that has sent prices tumbling, President Roosevelt called upon the nation to adopt a blanket code for all industry to increase purchasing power. In launching the greatest program for control of wages and working hours undertaken by any nation in the world, the President declared: "This plan depends solely on united action by all employers. For this reason I ask you as an employer to do your part in signing." The program forbids employment of any person under 16 years of age, limits the white-collar week to 40 hours and the factory week to 35 hours, and provides $15 as the weekly white-collar minimum.

President James Monroe in a speech any other manner their destiny." to Congress on Dec. 2, 1823 would hold sway. The United States, according to the Monroe doctrine, would prevent the Euro-pean powers of the time - including, ironically, Russia - from imposing their tyranny on the newly independent and still weak Latin American countries.

The Monroe doctrine served as the cornerstone of U.S. relations with powerful European adversaries in Latin America for nearly a century and a half. But today the Soviet Union, by its actions in Cubz and through Cubz in Central and South America, is challenging that historic U.S. guarantee to protect the nations of the Western Hemisphere against European in-terference "for the purpose of oppressing them or controlling in

The essence of the Brezhnev doctrine is to prohibit nations in the Soviet sphere of influence from escaping superpower domination. The essence of the Mouroe doctrine is to prevent superpowers from subjugating less powerful countries. The differences between the two are central to the way the United States approaches the most critical part of Central America today, Nicaragua.

Recent decisions by the Demo-cratic-controlled House Select Committee on Intelligence and House Foreign Affairs Committee endorsed legislative language known as the Boland-Zablocki bill. This has remarkable implications.

Boland-Zablocki supports the Brezhnev doctrine and refutes the Monroe doctrine, turning history upside down. By cutting off covert and overt support to those fighting the Cuhan-Soviet sister regime in Nicaragua, it makes the United States the enforcer of the Receimen doctrine. The United States, not the Soviets, would be the ultimate constraint on those fighting for greater freedom for Nicaragua.

"Socialist" Nicaragua is the arms depot, the nerve center, the training ground for the Soviet-Cubanbacked "revolution without fromtiers," to quote the Sandinist leadership, if Boland-Zablocki becomes law it is the United States that will prevent Nicaragua from reverting from Soviet-style socialism.

If the bill becomes law, North Americans will be the chief carriers of Brezhnev's legacy in the Western Hemisphere as his heirs move closer and closer to East-Europeanizing the southern U.S. border. While North Americans of another era could take pride in making the world safe for democracy, a newer breed could claim credit for making the new world safe for comm and dispatched underworld figures to commit the crime. The assassination devices that the United States considered using ran the gammt from high-powered rifles to poisoned pills, pens and cigars, deadly bacterial powders and even a con-taminated diving suit.

Those CIA conspiracies — once described by President Johnson as "Murder Inc." — extended beyond Cuba. for the CIA's past involvement in it again in Chile. This time the victim was General René Schneider, gated at least eight plots to murder Fidel Castro, one of which procommander of the Chilean army, a constitutionalist who opposed gressed to the point where the Unit-U.S.-fomented military overthrow ed States sent poison pills to Cuba of the elected government. In this case the agency delivered three submachine gms and ammunition to Chilean officers who were preparing to kidnap the general. It was thus established that the CIA intended to facilitate his forcible removal. In the event, General Schneider was killed by another group of abductors as he drew his handgun in self-defense. Of course, those misdeeds, which so plainly contradict professed U.S. principles, were perpetrated under deep cover. But no secret can be kept for long in a free society. It was only a question of time before a disclose the sordid facts.

The political price that the United States pays is heavy indeed. It is measured by the credibility that the latest self-serving Nicaraguan charges will have throughout Latin America, by the extent to which Third World countries have come to regard the United States as an imperialist power, and by the skepticism with which so many U.S. citizens view the pronouncements of their own government.

Because the Reagan administra-tion has brought back the old obses-sions of the Cold War, and because covert action is again being touted as a tough, realistic necessity, Americans should remind themselves that this antiseptic term is a semantic disguise for unacknowledged proxy wars, murder, black-mail, bribery, the spreading of lies and any other dirty trick deemed nseful in serving U.S. interests. In the dark alleys of co action, where the CIA eagerly adopts the tactics of the KGB, the United States seems determined to fulfill the prophecy of George Hunston Williams, the theologian who once warned, "Be cautious when you choose your enemy, for you will grow more like him."

WHAT a relief. I just didn't have it in me to shlep all the way to treaty. Mr. Reagan, so quick to with- it. I miss my beloved wife, I see my Washington this summer. Listening hold military equipment from us last year, does nothing to prod the Egyp-tians to live up to Camp David. With to all the complaints from the American Jews, racing around, facing the only press in the world as nasty as nants squabbling, isn't Now, to prove that I'm not dead this the time to start autonomy talks with Palestinians in Judea and Samaria? Of course — but the Arab leaders want a festering issue, not a good life for the Palestinians. So yes, I'm depressed, and I show old friends dying, I suffer for our 500 deaths in Lebanon, I am heartsick that Israel was unjustly blamed for the murder of Arabs by Arabs in the camps. And on Saturday I will be three score and ten. I wish I hadn't said I would resign at age 70. Should I resign? If I did, my long-time colleague Yitzhak Shamir would be the party choice. Moshe Arens could not serve immediately as prime minister because he is not a member of the Knesset, and David Levy, despite important backing by Sephar-dim, is not ready yet. Shamir would be seen as a caretaker until elections in 1985, but caretakers tend to run and lose, as President Ford did, and the country could wind up in the hands of a Shimon Peres. Or I could call for new elections this winter. Arens is the only minister paining political strength, and if he forms an alliance with Levy he could be our strongest candidate. Arens has a reputation for not being a politician, but if I like him and the Americans like him, he must be quite a politician.

But why run the risk of elections? I remember what Sadat said at Camp David, when I twitted him about democracy in his country: "Democracy is not the problem —elections are the problem. If Yitzhak Rahin gets the abor nomination away from Peres, Rabin might become prime minister. That wouldn't be a tragedy, but the country would be better off with the Likud. It's taking a big chance.

So I may have to stay a while, much as I would like to write my history of the Irgun. I'll have to snap out of this terrible feeling, though, if I can; the opposition can make too much out of a psychologically unfit prime minister. Besides, the country needs a leader who can be 100 percent all the time. If I can't be, I ought to step down, and leave the decision on succession to the people. That's it. I'll make another come-back, mentally, politically. If I see I can't, I'll quit like de Ganlle.

struck me as a god-awful analogy.

The admiral had missed my point but he did add considerably to my knowledge of the story of the Maine. He powerfully reinforced, as well, the case that Ronald Reagan's grasp of history's great moments is thin. He also gave evidence that, at age 83, the gale has lost none of its force.

The Maine

By Philip Geyelin

WASHINGTON — Under at least half a dozen presidents,

Admiral Hyman Rickover was a gale force. A man of terrible temper and of single-minded dedication, he was the creator of the nuclear navy.

In their first encounter, Rickover

asked junior officer Jimmy Carter

how he did at the Naval Academy.

Pridefully, Carter said he had fin-ished 29th. "Did you do your hest."

Rickover demanded. "Not always." Carter replied, to which Rickover snapped back: "Why not?" Whence when he called the other day to deliver a brisk critique ou a recent reference of mine (in "Remember the Maine, Certainly," IHT, July 7) to

Had I not, he asked, read his definitive study, published in 1976 by the Naval History Division of the Navy Department, entitled "How the But-tleship Maine was Destroyed"? I had not. Was I not aware that he had proved conclusively that it could not have been an external explosion (suggesting the work of Spanish subo-tents) as had been concluded by a court of inquiry at the time? It had to have been "internal" (suggesting an accident). I didn't know that.

And so it went. "What did they teach you in high school?" I was developing a deep sympathy for Jimmy Carter. "You're the guy that —ed it up," the admiral almost shouted,
"and it's up to you to un--it."

Minutes later he was back on the phone, reading from the final passage of his 1976 report: "With the vastness of our government and the difficulty of controlling it, we must make sure that those in 'high places' do not, without most careful consideration of the consequences, exert our prestige and might. Such uses of our powe may result in serious international actions at great cost in lives and money - injurious to the interests and standing of the United States." Precisely my point. When Presi dent Reagan says casually know, they blew up the Maine" in justification of the use of American military force, he is overlooking the was exploiting the Maine to whip America into war with Spain, there was no evidence of just how the Maine was blown up. Admiral Rickover to the contrary there is still no evidence. Appendix A of his report convincingly makes the case against an "external" source exploding inwards, as with a mine. As for internal sources, the report leans toward the theory of a coal bunker fire, but does not exclude "crew sabo tage, a small arms accident, a bomb planted by a visitor" — which is that not to exclude a Spanish visitor.

But the report is relevant whether we are talking about the Maine, or the "battle" in the Gulf of Tonkin that triggered the first bombing of North Vietnam, or the extreme vunerability of an expanding U.S. presence in Central America to terrorist reprisals of uncertain origin. As for Ronald Reagan's reading of the lesson of the Maine, I recomm the penultimate paragraph of Admiral Rickover's seven-year-old report "In the modern technological age. the battle cry 'Remember the Maine' should have a special meaning for as. With almost instantaneous commu nications that can command weap ons of unprecedented power, we can no longer approach technical prob-lems with the casualness and confidence held by Americans in 1898. The Maine should impress us that technical problems must be examined by competent and qualified people; and that the results of their in vestigation must be fully and laidy presented to their fellow citizens." I hope that un -s it.

My reading of the Indonesian press reports is that the armed forces commander, General Bennie Murdani, did acknowledge that his troops were responsible, since he frankly stated that security forces are engaged in the current nationwide campaign "to combat crime." If the armed forces chief acknowledges such a thing and goes on to admit, as he did, that more than 300 people are known to have died as a result of these operations -- adding,

A.L. Rowse and the Rewriting of Shakespeare

ONDON — Shakespeare has gone through a lot and survived. "King Lear" was played with a happy ending for nearly 200 years and, quite recently, an English repertory company, finding its leading man delayed in a pub, played "Hamlet" without the prince and reported it

A.L. Rowse, the eagerly controversial Elizabethan historian and emeritus fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, has just completed a huge Shakespeare project: He has rewritten the plays for an American publisher. The new lition will be out toward the year's end.

Mary Blume

Rowse is a sprightly workabolic in his 80th year who has written more books than he can remember. He doesn't like to call the Shakespeare project a rewrite. "I'm really very conservative," he said over tea and toasted buns in his club, the Athenaeum. "What I've done is remove the superfluous difficulties.

"It all started with my learning from Dick Cavett on television that an awful lot of young people in American schools and colleges are really going off Shakespeare because they cannot take the archaic language."

Rowse has appeared a lot on "The Dick Cavett Show." He has also done Johnny Carson, although he likes it less. "I sort of like talking alone," he explained.

He is one of a handful of British historians who are media personalities. (In the United States, former government officials and diet experts hog the airwaves, while in France it is doctors who write books and hype them on TV). In Britain, often because of the interest of the late Lord Beaverbrook and because of such TV programs as "The Brains Trust," some historians have become household names. Rowse eats it up; a colleague, Hugh Trevor-Roper, probably wishes now that he had never seen a flashbulb.

"I said to the Daily Mail. "He always has been like that —he rushes in where angels fear to tread," Rowse says of Trevor-Roper's hasty acceptance of the forged Hitler diaries.
"I made fun of it a bit and said how silly it was of Roper to come out with, 'I stake my reputation on it being authentic,' as if he were staking his virginity at the age of 70. Silly."

Rowse's voice sweeps and soars with indig-nation or delight. He is an accomplished chatterer: confiding, cunning, agreeably libelous, undeflectable. He does not consider himself the greatest textual scholar of Shakespeare but the unimpeachable authority on Shakespeare's life and times, which is perhaps better. And so he has undertaken to modernize the Bard. "Remember this, this is the point you must make," he says, heedlessly sugaring his tea.

"Shakespeare is our greatest contribution to world culture. When I say 'our,' I mean you as well as me — our language is our country nowadays. It was a Russian who said that. Well, we want to make him accessible.

Why not get rid of superfluous difficulties? We, all of us nowadays, use modern spelling and modern punctuation. Well, why not leave out words we don't know the meaning of, words like 'coystrel'?"

Coystrel, Rowse explains, means rascal and so he has used rascal because the scansion is

Or you can take out the subjunctives, you see. We hardly use the subjunctive. I don't say 'If it be'; I say 'If it is.' Don't you? Elizabethan grammar isn't grammar today: 'Nor shall you think that neither' — double negative. 'This is much worser than before' — double compara-

"He spake it. Why not he spoke it? He writ it. Why not he wrote it? Why not get rid of thous and thees and thine and haths and doths? 'Th' is almost impossible for foreigners to say. And some words have different meanings today. Presently' meant immediately to Shakespeare, not in a while." "The Merry Wives of Windsor," with its dialects and colloquialisms, caused Rowse the most problems. In Hamlet's soliloguy "To be or not to be," only the words "quietus," which means acquittance, and "fardels," or burdens, were replaced. Rowse says there is talk of Edward Albee's directing his "Macbeth" in Virginia for Shakespeare's next birthday.

'All previous scholars have made a mess of Shakespeare's life," Rowse states. "You need the combination of historical with literary and, above all, poetic perception. You really need an Elizabethan historian-poet. And how many of those are there? I'm not in favor of false modesty. There's only one."

Rowse's books range, in addition to his Elizabethan studies, from "Three Cornish Cats" (he is a Cornishman and very prolific about it) to "Homosexuals in History." Shakespeare, he says, was definitely not homosexual: "All the poor professors got it wrong, he was a highly sexed hetero." He has also published a lot of poetry, which he says betrays all the lot of poetry, which he says betrays all the secrets of his inner life. It has failed to attract wide attention.

"I know I'm a much better poet than my old friend Stephen Spender. I'm not such a good poet as my old friend Eliot, but I'm a better poet than Stephen. I'm not such a good poet as went off the rails. I knew him, you know."

For a man who considers himself unsociable, Rowse has known everyone from Agatha Christie to Chester Nimitz from Winston Churchill to Edmund Wilson, whom he dismisses as a superficial sciolist, to W.H. Anden. ("He was a gentleman, Wystan was, but he was so unappetizing, so dirty and unwashed"). His latest book is dedicated to Jacqueline Onassis. "She's really a good woman, you know.

Onassis complained that she was always reading instead of, I suppose, other things. I really don't think Jackie is a bit sexy. She's very well read. She reads and reads.

Another big reader is Caspar W. Weinberger, the U.S. secretary of defense, who gave a Rowse book to Ronald Reagan. "Reagan wrote me that the only Shakespeare role he played was Petruchio, which he finds of great use in dealing with Congress. Awfully good, don't you think?" Rowse gives an appreciative

"I'm also quite friendly with Nixon. He always sends me his books and so forth. He isn't very beautiful, it's true, but he knows the world better than Reagan does."

Rowse's most recent discovery was the autobiographical elements in "Two Gentlemen of Verona." His most important find, which he regards as definitive, was the solution to the basic problems of Shakespeare's sonnets: the dating, and the identities of Mr. W.H., the Rival Poet and the Dark Lady, who was a rather randy Italian named Emilia Lanier who also wrote poems.

"She was the second-best woman poet of the age. The best was Mary Countess of Pembroke. Emilia Lanier was a damn sight better than Queen Elizabeth, who wrote old-fashioned doggerel. You know Tennessee Williams was a Lanier, and, of course, there was Sidney Lanier 100 years ago down in Macon, Georgia." Rowse dislikes the word eccentric but accepts it in its literal meaning of "away from the

"I myself don't think I quite fit in the Endish environment - I'm not very good at English humbug, you know. Neither was Winston. Neither is Margaret. She doesn't talk humbug, none at all.

Born into a poor Cornish family, Alfred Leslie Rowse wrecked his health to get his All Souls fellowship while such Oxford contemporaries as Graham Greene, Evelyn Waugh and John Betjeman idly took poor degrees or were sent down. He considers himself a man

"Tve made a diagonal path across society

Louis MacNeice or probably Robert Lowell, though I do think Robert Lowell's later poetry went off the rails. I knew him, you know." from very simple working people to all the grandish people in society," he said. "I've missed out the middle class. Well now, intellectual life is usually middle-class, so I'm really the odd man out. I get all the brickbars from the middle-academic subculture.

"You see, all these professors in the Shake-speare establishment, they have a sort of blin-kered trade-union activity. I think they genuinely do not understand what I'm at. They should try to find out. I'm always trying to

"There's a very great authority in All Souls College on Italian history. He said to me, 'My dear, I'm not in the least interested in who the Dark Lady was.' I said to him, 'Look here, if you had discovered anything important about Michelangelo, I'd be the first person who'd want to know.' Everybody ought to want to

"What makes me so angry and makes me turn on the third-raters is that it's their duty to follow the discoveries of a first-rate mind. It's not for a first-rater to try and really lower himself to the level of conventional third-rat-

"In contemporary society, and this is why I hate its guts, they all think that their opinions are as good as anybody else's. Well, they're not." Despite such views, Rowse is an unabashed Americanophile, even to the point of declaring Beverly Hills beautiful.

"It is rather paradoxical," he agreed. "I think it's because even it you say the most unpopular things as I do — because I'm awfully reactionary and undemocratic and all that and hate democratic humbug. I'm just like Margaret. I agree with every word that woman says — the ordinary people may be idiots but they have a horse sense and they can tell whether you're sincere or not. And though I say all these things, I never wrap it up in

Last week Rowse was at Oxford as usual to open the English-Speaking Union conference. On Saturday he will lecture at the Victoria and Albert Museum, and in August he will speak on the early English Renaissance at Jean Paul Getty's former house, Sutton Place. His industry is unflagging and amazing.

"It's all I'm interested in, sweetie," he says "I'm not much interested in anything but the Elizabethan age." A young man has come from the BBC to talk to Rowse about life and society and his attention turns.

"I don't mind talking about life and society I'm absolutely sick of talking about me, dear.' And the talking, with hardly a breath taken,

ARIS - Jenny Bradley, who died on the Riviera last month at age 97, was a literary legend. Instrumental in introducing Continental literature to the English-speaking world and Anglo-American writers to Continental readers, she was acquainted in her day with virtually every author of international renown. As a nt. she re nted Joyce, He Miller, Gide, Sartre and the estate of Marcel Proust. Born Jenny Serruys in Belgium, she studied in Paris and at the University of London. An uncle was a defense attorney in the Dreyfus case and Clemencean and Zola often visited the lawyer's home to discuss procedure in L'Affaire. "Clémenceau, very much the public orator on all occasions, did the talking, while Zola sat quietly meditating, fingering his pince-nez," she recalled. Then a schoolgirl, she was appointed to carry a luncheon basket every day to a defense witness held in the Cherche-Midi prison. Splinters of wood had been found in his omelette and a plot to poison him was suspected.

Her father, a Belgian diplomat, was posted in Odessa in the early 1900s, and Miss Serruys spent some time in Russia, where she visited Tolstoy on his country estate, Yasnaya Polyana, and elsewhere met the writers of the rising generation: Dmitri Merezhkovsky, the Symbolist poets Zinaida Gippius, Alexander Blok and Feodor Sologub, and the novelist Mikhail Artzybashev.

During World War I, Serruys was an army norse. One imagines that she was an excellent one, for her authoritative manner and stern, calm sense of discipline were ideally suited to that profession. One of her nonbattlefield feats occurred at a charity fete when Sarah Bernhardt, in a temperamental tizzy, vowed she could not "go on." Serruys quieted the great actress's nervous outburst and reasoned her into taking the stage. In 1921, Jenny Serruys married William Aspenwall Bradley, an American novelist and essayist and the Paris agent of the publishing house Harcourt Brace. They formed a literary agency and their home in a mansion on the Ile Saint-Louis, once the property of Richeheu, became the meeting place of authors of all nations. When James Joyce, then completing "Ulysses" and broke, came from Zurich to settle in Paris, Mrs. Bradley smoothed his way, lending him money and buying him a table at which to write. They remained lifelons

Another friend was Gertrude Stein. Long a Paris resident, La Stein held Saturday evening receptions in her apartment, its walls lined with collections of Picassos and Modiglianis.

"Gertrude's soirces were an amusing game, but you had to know the rules," Mrs. Bradley remembered. "A first-time guest was forgiven for mentioning Joyce's name once, but if he - or she - repeated it, there

"One night Hemingway came in drunk and surly. Gertrude told him to leave and he went off. Then she was stricken with regrets and beseeched me to bring him back. I was able to arrange his return, but their relations were shaky after that."

Hemingway's posthumously published memoir of his Paris days, "A Moveable Feast," reveals his disillusionment with Gertrude Stein. Another problem was F. Scott Fitzgerald, who arrived early in the 1920s after his first success, with a letter of introduction from Max Perkins, the Scribner editor, and an overwhelming desire to make the acquaintance of Anatole France, whom Mrs. Bradley knew well. "We went to call on Anatole France in his Avenue Foch mansion,"

she explained, "with Scott in a highly excited, semi-intoxicated state. Scott knew no French and France spoke no English, so I had to be interpreter. Tell him I'm a good egg—no, tell him I'm a bad egg, Scott kept shouling after being introduced. The silly expression has no meaning in French, but I tried to comply. Old France smiled his slow wise smile, more i think at the sight of this wild, young American's exuberance than at the gibberish."

Ezra Pound, Sherwood Anderson, Edna St. Vincent Millay, Carl Van Vechten, Theodore Dreiser, H.L. Mencken, André Gide, Thomas Mann, Colette, Arnold Bennett, G.B. Stern, Sinclair Lewis, Jean Giraudoux and Jean Cocteau were among other visitors who came to the Bradley salon between the wars. Henry Miller, who was still regarded as a pornographic author at the time, was a special favorite of the Bradleys, who sought to find him a publisher. But Jenny did not like Somerset Maugham. "He pretends to be a gentleman, but he is not." she ruled. This verdict was evidently irrevocable and no questions were asked.

World War II disrupted international cultural relations. Bradley died suddenly in 1939 and the Nazi occupation made communication with the outside world impossible. The famous literary agency appeared to belong to history, but with the Liberation, Mrs. Bradley decided to relight the lights. Going it alone, she signed a new generation of French writers for American publishers, Sartre and Camus among them, and supplied French publishers with the latest books in English for transla-his mother; James Hadley Chase, who had 75 thrillers in French translation; John Erskine; Antoine Bibesco; Natalie Barney; Truman Capote, and publishers from everywhere.

Mrs. Bradley, with her refined taste and deep understanding of literature, was a perceptive critic. Her judgments were not, of course, infallible. She told of the ire of her friend Henri de Montherlant, when she pooh-poohed the French dramatist, Georges de Porto-Riche, whom he greatly admired. "I may have been wrong," she conceded. But she rejected any traffic with the cheap and the banal. Trash was trash and she refused to be associated with it. "Let's rise above it," she would gallantly declare, lifting her champagne glass. She knew the fine art of letters and she knew the book trade, a combination that qualified her as the ideal literary agent. She was superb at business, possessing an acumen that stunned Hollywood producers hunting for material. "Don't accept those terms — ask for twice as much," she advised a novelist tempted by what seemed to him a fabulous fortune for the movie rights to something he had written. He acted on her warning and waited jitteringly for a week. Then, as she had predicted, he received a doubling of the offer.

As a discoverer of talents, as a fascinating personality, a link to remote literary worlds and as a great lady, Jenny Bradley will be greatly missed and long remembered.

The Opera's New Clothes

by Donal Henahan

EW YORK - In "Walden," Thoreau remarks rather snappishly, "Beware of all enterprises that remire new clothes." That may have Thorean followed in a rather lackadaisical way, but it is definitely not true of the opera business in 1983: snappy new suits and fashionable tailors are making most of the news. Of course, I may be taking a narrow view of the matter, having recently attended premieres of Ken Russell's "Madama Butterfly" in Charleston, South Carolina, and Peter Sellars's The Mikado" in Chicago. Both directors seemed determined above all to outfit these elderly works in modish clothes designed to cover up unsightly bulges and sags and convey an impression of vitality.

Sellars's staging had a witty fizz and even a certain harebrained legitimacy ("The Mikado" is not "Fidelio," after all), while Russell merely put "Butterfly" on a wheel and broke her. It was no doubt by coincidence that both chose to practice their jujitsu on works with Japanese settings. However, in both productions attention was focused more on the costumer's cleverness than on what was being costumed.

It does begin to appear that such trendy stagings represent more than a passing phase in opera. The decision apparently has been made in high administrative places that opera is a wallflower in need of serious making over, perhaps even plastic surgery. Opera is being treated as if she were one of those dowdy, glasses-wearing secretaries in old movies who are handed over to tailors, drapers, dress designers and cosmeticians who hope to transform her into a glamour girl capable of catching the boss's eye.

Since I am the last one in the world to resist a trend, provided I am able to recognize it, I hereby offer some fresh scenarios of my own devising for tired old operas.

"Aida" - The tenor Radames is a captain in the elite Anti-Crime Unit of the New York Police Department, a position that allows him to oppose crime on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays. He loves Aida, a former prostitute now employed as a cleaning lady in the station house. Her father, Amonasto, a kingpin of the heroin racket, is brought in on a possession charge. Will Aida persuade her lover-cop to join dad and daughter in escaping into the Lower East Side underworld?

"Rigoletto" - He's a television comic on the way down, reduced to filling in when Johnny Carson's substitutes go on vacation. He keeps a mistress, Gilda, whom he represents as his daughter out of fear of alienating the network boss, a sanctimonious Bible-thumper named Duke who secretly covets Gilda. The tragic final scene is played out at a motel in Naples, Florida.

"The Barber of Seville" — Figaro is a Warren Beatty type, a hair-dresser and unofficial Mr. Fix-It who zips around town on his motorcycle taking care of a variety of odd jobs. He falls for Rosie, the young wife of the local heart surgeon and after much popping in and out of closets, he beats the doctor to death with a blow-dryer and escapes on his Harley with Rosie riding happily on the back seat.

"Faust" — The owner of a Toyota agency makes a pact with the devil. In exchange for a big markdown on a sports car, the devil offers to make the dealer's feeble-minded son and lumpish wife appear in his television commercials as utterly charming. The devil also proposes to stop the auto dealer's hairpiece from slipping during the commercials. Intervention by the Federal Communications Commission cheats the devil out of his half of the deal. "Boris Godunov" - A big-shot congressman, talked about as presidential timber, is stopped on the street by a wild-eyed panhandler who warns him that a major disaster is just around the corner. Senator Goodenough, the legislator, walks away unconcerned, believing the beggar is merely alluding to the White House, a block away. However, the television es that Senator Gooden. ough is about to be indicted as part of an Abscam type of operation. His past transgressions, involving a small boy named Dimitri,

"Tosca" - The star of a daytime television serial suspects her boyfriend, a set designer, of playing footsie with a female colleague. She arranges with a hitman, Carlo Scarpia, to kill the boyfriend and make it look accidental. The star pretends to commit suicide by leaping out of a jail window, but Carlo catches her in an airbag and they live happily ever after.

"The Flying Dutchman" - A famous tennis player, having sworn at an umpire and abused a ball, is condemned to wander the face of the earth for all eternity, playing in nothing but big-money tournaments. His wife, bored with having to watch him win and tired of laundering his wristbands and socks, pretends to commit suicide by leaping out of the top row of the stands at Wimbledon. In fact, she is caught in an airbag and escapes with the head linesman to a life of bliss in Monte Carlo.

"Otello" - The time frame has been moved forward to what the British director Jonathan Miller has described mysteriously as "the Mafia period in New York." Otello is a cano mafioso, Desdemona his moll. Bored with watching him count his drug-related millions night after night, she drops a hanky and makes sure it is retrieved for her by one of Otello's trusted captains. Desdemona and the captain run off to Venice, California, where Otello catches up with them. In a rage he tries to kill Desdemona, but she has a black belt in karate and succeeds in strangling him with his own cummerband. He is given a quiet funeral and taken in a tin drum to a waste-disposal plant in New Jersey.

"Orfeo ed Euridice" - A sexpot movie actress agrees to marry an importunate young cameraman (a Woody Allen-type) if he is able to keep from looking at her while she changes wigs and puts in her contacts.

"Norma" — Norma Jean, a Hollywood

beauty, discovers that her secret lover, a famous American politician, is cheating on her. She overdoses on back issues of Foreign Affairs and Partisan Review

"War and Peace" - A made-for-television opera set in large Sun Belt city, circa 1980. Grand historical sweep, intricate subplots, inly commissioned libretto, refashioned from the Tolstoy original by Barbara Cartland, Plot concerns invasion by unemployed Northeastabout to come to light. He goes crazy and falls erners (Northies), successfully turned back by to his death from the too step of the Capitol. state troopers under command of General Dix-

> "Macheth" — A cabinet member, acting under false assumption that he is next in line for the presidency, conspires with wife to poison the leader's Sanka. A close rereading of the constitution reveals the plotters' mistake, too

> "Tristan und Isolde" — A nubile model, on her way to marry a grossly fat producer to land a film part, meets a blond bouncer named Tristan at Las Vegas. Their eyes lock and half an hour later they take a plane to Brazil. It crashes on takeoff while they embrace in business class.

"The Ring of the Nibelungs" — A four-part serial work about exploitation of the handicapped, labor-instigated delays on a castle construction project and speculation on the gold exchange. Dragon of Inflation is slain but Gnomes of Zurich conspire to make Wotan the Tycoon lose his seat on the Comex. Final scene shows Dow-Jones tumbling chaos in the

"Semiramide" — Handsome young Alfredo Orfano, a pizza cook, discovers that he was an adopted child. After years of searching and many appearances on television talk shows, he finds his lost father, Carlo Ramide, wealthy owner of the same Gimme a Pizza Pie parlor in which Alfredo is employed. Alfredo is elated at learning who he is, but decides not to abandon his past entirely. He chooses to go by the name of Alfredo Orfano-Ramide. "Part of me will always be an Orfano," he sings in his final aria,

"but I am also proud to be a semi-Ramide." I feel sure that even as these updated story lines were being sketched here, far-sighted opera directors somewhere were already at work putting similar ideas on the stage. If so, I apologize, and so should they.

Summer Fire Flowers in Japan

by Jared Lubarsky

OKYO - in July the Japanese throw peonies of fire into the summer sky. They have been making handbi literally "fire flowers" - and sending them up on summer evenings for centuries. The oldest, grandest fireworks festival in lapan, the one that runs right off the Richter scale, is the Sonnida River Festival in Tokyo on

The authorities expect it to draw 900,000 people; perhaps 10 million more will watch all or part of it on television. The festival will spend the equivalent of about $400,000 on the fireworks alone: 17,500 shells in 80 minutes. This is nothing out of the ordinary, even for a 250th anniversary bash. The first Sumida River Festival dates back to 1733. A famine the year before had taken a terrible toil: The fireworks were to comfort the souls of the dead and to drive off whatever vestiges remained of bad luck. Before long, the festival was an annual event.

The late 18th and early 19th centuries were vintage years for fireworks. There was peace and prosperity. In Edo, the Shogun's capital, an urban culture was coming to life. An enormous amount of creative energy went into the business of going out for a good time. The city had style, and stylish folk, if they could afford it, patronized the fireworks festivals. The highranking samurai or the merchant prince might give a gold koban (about a year's wages for a household servant) for a display in his own name; the wealthy draper with a penchant for life in the fast lane watched the festival from a chartered boat, with a complement of geisha to pour his wine

The Japanese of the Meiji period, when Edo became Tokyo, had somewhat less interest in fancy night life: They had a modern nationstate to build in a hurry. But the Sumida River Festival kept getting better, and the crowds kept getting bigger; in 1897, the Ryogoku Bridge collapsed under the weight of the watchers on it.

In later years the festival was often suspended, but it was revived in all its glory in 1978, with simultaneous displays at two different points on the river, and it poses even more formidable challenges to the handling of people en masse. Festival organizers this year will mobilize 11,000 policemen and 2,000 firemen, assisted by 5,000 volunteer safety marshals, to see that all goes well.

There is something to be said for watching the fireworks from the shore: Once you've been in a crowd 900,000 strong, you have more of an appreciation of what everyday life is like for the Tokyo commuter. There is more here, of course, than mere packed humanity: street stalls, for example, hawking an incredible vari-ety of things to eat and drink (years of research have determined that the neck suffers no Il effects from being craned up at fireworks, if the head is lowered at regular intervals to beer and yakitori); girls by the thousands, willowy in their bright cotton summer kimonos, sumo wrestlers; singers and dancers; a happening without pickpockets. Well, hardly any.

Visitors with exceptionally good comes-tions can watch the fireworks from one of the traditional Edo-period covered boats, called yakata-lune. Two companies, Komatsuya and Amisei, will operate 62 of these vessels between them, with room on board for an average of 30 passengers each. The cost is about 10,000 ven (roughly $40) and up, depending on the food and drink ordered. The yakata-base are usually booked months in advance by clients who go back generations. But guests at one of the major hotels can take one of the larger excussion boats of the Tokyo Miyako Kanko line, which will swing up the river and back that evening and serve a box supper for around 15,000 year.

If there's one cavil to make about the Su-mida River Festival, it's that the site is very densely settled, and many of the houses are made of wood. To hold down the risk of fire. the displays will use nothing higger than a four-and-a-half-inch shell. True, when 500 of them go off at once, it takes the breath away. But the Marutamaya Company, which sup plies half the fireworks for the Sumida Festival, makes shells as big as a yard (almost a meter) across. You have to be at the Nagoka Festival in Niigata Prefecture on Aug. 1 and 3 to see epiphanies like that.

At the fireworks festival in Ojiya last September, they sent up a shell that was more than a yard across and weighed 836 pounds (380 kilograms). It burst into a shower of colors almost a half mile wide.

The owners of Marutamaya have been making fireworks since the 17th century. The company's current president, Toshio Ogatsu, is the 12th of his line and the concern now supplies fireworks to festivals all over the world. The Sumida River Festival is only one of tens this summer, all of them in reasonable reach of Tokyo. The earliest is perhaps the Yokohama Port Festival, held every year to celebrate the arrival of Commodore Matthew Perry in 1853, forcing a reluctant Japan to recognize the outside world. The festival came to a climax on Wednesday with a display of about 3,000 fireworks.

At Toshima-en, an amusement park on the outskirts of Tokyo, there are 4,500 shells' worth of fireworks starting this Saturday evening and on every Saturday from then until

In Brazil, a Roundup of Gauchos

by Bryna Brennan

ORTO ALEGRE. Brazil - Romantic images of the freespirited Brazilian cowboy are being revived in southern cities bere, with youngsters and adults alike donning traditional gancho garb, sipping bitter berb tea and listening to folk music. "There is a very strong movement," said Antonio Augusto Fagundes, a folklorist and lawyer. "People, especially in cities, have discovered that the roots of the gaucho are in the land, and they don't want to loge their

The Brazilian gaucho (pronounced, in this Portugueso-speaking comtry, ga-oo-shoo), who lives in the southern pampas or plants, is typically a cartleman whose origins are from Portuguese and Spanish settlers and native Indians. His traditions, according to Fagundes, grew out of a love for the plains and a strong sense of independence, in the 1700s. Today, however, Brazil is nearly 70 percent urban. The Center for Gancho Traditions, based in Porto Alegre, a city of 1 million and capital of Rio Grande do Sul state at Brazil's southern tip, works to keep the cowboy customs alive. The organization has about 750 affiliates, operating as social clubs. On a recent Friday night, the center's wooden hall in Porto Alegre was packed with about 500 people of all ages, about half of whom wore gaucho garb.

"I wear these clothes on weekends," said Fagundes, 48, demonstrating his baggy troosers, called bombacker, his poncho, his scarf, his sport and his hat with an upturned brim. Rows of Brazilians focused attention on an accordion player and a guitarist. Others mingled or stood around an open barbecoe pit.

"I come here because I like to stick with people I can identify with," ar-old Luiz Fernando Bastista. He took a sip of mate berb test through a silver strew that rested in a hollowed-out gound and added, "The gameho is a man of the land, and we cannot forget it. The gameho is the product of a region."

Brazil's ganchos share many characteristics with their Spanish-speaking neighbors in Argentina and Urugusy. They have similar dress, traditions and occupations.

"Our ancestors fought wars on what was disputed land to stay Brazilian." Pagundes explained. "But we were formed from the same roots." To keep this tradition "is my life," Fagundes said. "Sociologists, outsiders, they say we are he-men," he said, rolling a traditional gancho cigarette in a piece of a corn husk, "We don't say this, but we like to think that it is so. Our women are satisfied." © 1983 Associated Press

The Return of the Salad Days

by Craig Claiborne

TEW YORK - The salad has come a long way lately. To realize just how far, you need only glance back at the typical restaura few years ago, where either a fruit salad (one of gastronomy's more forgettable items) or a plain green salad were the standard items in the salad line.

There were exceptions: some decent and substantial scafood and poultry salads, such as lobster, crab, shrimp and chicken. And there was the ubiquitous chef's salad with its combination of ham, cheese, chicken and hardcooked eggs.

But it was the arrival of nouvelle cuisine that rescued the salad, on both sides of the Atlantic. With its emphasis on light, colorful, imaginative ideas, nouvelle opened up a new array of possibilities. Santeed goose liver on a bed of greens, dressed with walnut or hazelout oil and raspberry vinegar, is just one example of how far a salad can go when its maker decides to pull out a few stops. Wolfgang Puck, the chef at Spago, a restanrant in Los Angeles, is a master of the inventive cold salad. He prepared one of the most popular dishes at the recent economic summit meeting in Williamsburg, Virginia, a salad of roast saddle of American lamb on a bed of limestone lettuce. It drew more than a few compliments.

It's pure conjecture on my part, but I believe there is another inspiration at play behind many of today's salads: the beef salad of Thailand with its spicy dressing of fish essence and herbs. Variations on this theme have recently turned up in the repertories of several cooks.

The best thing about the salad revolution is that the possibilities for invention are virtually limitless. For ingredients, almost anything goes, from vegetables to pasta to beef to roast duck. Home cooks also have at their disposal a variety of greens, depending on what the local market can offer: watercress and endives, curly chicory, radicchio, the red leaf form of chicory, and so on.

Any of these greens may be tossed together and flavored with such fine herbs as tarragon, chives, contender, dill and basil, red or green. For dressings, there is olive oil, hazehout and walnut oil, green peppercoms, cayenne or herb mustard and vinegars in a multimade of season-Pasta salads may be bound with a little vinzigrette (made with vinegar or lemon or lime juice or a blend of these). There are numerous sources for fresh pasts, and salads can be made of filled pastas such as ravioli, tortellini and tortelloni. A favorite of mine is a

Following in the footsteps of Vincent Van Gogh, photographers, editors, gallery owners and students are meeting for the 14th consecutive year in this city on the Rhone at the head of the Camargue delta.

The Rencontres Internationales de la Photographie (International Photographic Encounters), founded by Lucien Clergue in 1969, offers a monthlong program of workshops, conferences, debates and audiovisual shows as well as exhibitions scattered throughout the city in historic sites.

TUTTGART, West Germany — When the northern Europeans imported the Gastarbeiter, they imported more than workers. They imported cultures," says Barbara Schatz, organizer of 1983 Gastarbeiter Theater Festival held in Stuttgart last month. "What we're seeing now are the fruits of that."

Gastarbeiter, German for "guest worker," refers to the 10 million people from Italy, Turkey, Greece, Yugoslavia, Spain and Portugal who came to work in northern Europe over the last 30 wave In t the last 30 years. In the 1960s and 1970s, they were there to halo and 1970s, they in a time of economic stagnation and intercul-Germany's so-called economic miracle. Now, tural antagonism, the second generation of immigrants is maturing — and with it, a new hybrid culture, with its own music, literature and theater.

The Stattgart festival, which unfolded dur-ing an unusual burst of tropical heat, attracted several thousand market from the several thousand workers from 16 countries to discuss, exhibit, read and write about the experience of being foreign in West Germany.

The interest is catching on elsewhere in En-rope, too. The Turkish film director Yilmaz Güney, who attracted international attention with his award-winning film "Yol," is making the rounds of the film festivals, and a Turkish Creek singing duo, Zülfü Omer Livaneli and Maria Farnatouri, is touring Europe this summer to promote peace between their countries. Yugoslav puppeteers from France are to ap-pear in August in Cologne with Greek choruses from West Germany and Turkish theater groups from Stockholm. The Gastarbeiter seem to be enjoying a cultural vogue.

"It's not so much that they are "in." says Schatz, initiator of the general assembly in Stuttgart, "but rather that the problems they experience are creating an intellectual reaction."

The problems she detailed include the difficulties in finding housing already a pressing problem in northern Europe, of securing em-ployment, and, most of all, blindness in the host countries to the value of assimilation. . A second generation's 15 years of school and street life in northern Europe have effectively created multicultural societies, especially in the German industrial cities, the centers of immi-

am," commented a local priest participating in the theater festival.

Like its members, Gastarbeiter theater profits from its mix of languages, genres and na-tionalities. "I'm an Italian who often thinks like a German," says Cynthia Marcocchi, 22, a member of Frankfurt's Teatro Siciliano who has lived in West Germany for the last 13

Frankfurt's I MACAP Theater, for instance, consists of five young Sicilians who use a mixture of Sicilian dialect and Gastarbeiter German to satirize German stereotypes of Italians and the intrinsic comedy of German-Italian relations. Their performances start with a reckless over-dramatization of Latin earthiness as the cast showers the audience with barley, millet, tomatoes and apples, chanting rapturous words of welcome. The commedia dell'arte farce ends with a break-in into Heaven, while an angel helplessly swinging from the Pearly Gates tries to stop them by blowing a sick-sounding trumpet.

The Turkish Theater of Munich's play "The Land of Dreams" - the title alludes to West Germany - is full of teachers, officials, and employers who seem always to be murmuring "La La" an incomprehensible mumble that sounds dismayingly bland to the immigrant. A favorite moment in many of the plays is the arrival of a German with a stuffed dog, little "Fritzie-Witzie." To the Gastarbeiter, the cloying affection West Germans shower on their pets contrasts ironically with their lack of acceptance of foreigners.

The rise of both the immigrant community and its theater is encapsulated in the history of I MACAP, named for the initials of its five founding members.

"We founded the Gallus Center in Frankfurt about 10 years ago," says Brian Michaels, 35, an Englishman who is the troupe's artistic director. "It was to be an international youth center. Then these little Italian kids started coming around to play, little 8- and 10-yearolds. They wanted to play, we wanted to do other things. But somewhere along the line they got interested in what we were doing."

"To us," says Antonia Pavia, the Harpo Marx of the troupe, "the center became more important than our homes. It's where we grew up, where we met our friends."

Using skills learned at the center, the new troupe started out doing the standard themes of immigrant culture: the lonely life in company dormitories, the barshness of German bu-"These Greek kids are more Aachen than I reaucracy. Then they moved into comedy.

"Our people [the Italian community in Frankfurt] knew all about our problems," says Pavia. "We wanted to show the richness of our culture to the Germans." That attitude is typical of the Italians, often called the "noble" Gastarbeiter because of their relative economic security and acceptance throughout Western Europe. Their theater shows a marked trend toward professionalism and entertainment and away from the depiction of the classic problems of the

The Portuguese are the old-line fundamen talists of the immigrant communities. "They tend to keep to themselves, they don't change," says Schatz. "Nice Machine," played by the theater troupe of the Portuguese Culture Center in Frankfort, details the story of the millionth goest worker to arrive in Germany. First welcomed with mopeds and port wine, he loses his job and is finally expelled from Germany.

The largest, most controversial and factionridden group of immigrants are the Turks, who form more than 50 percent of West Germany's nigrant population. Their visibility is high. "They're not Christian, they don't make pizza and they look Asiatic," says one German.

Their difficulties may help to explain why the Turks have contributed much of the best art and literature on the Gastarbeiter scene. The painter Haneli Yeter superimposes portraits of immigrant families over the daily realities of their lives: residence visas, graffiti and airline tickets. Aras Oren, perhaps the best Turkish writer writing on Europe, has just published "Manège" (Circus Ring), a novel about a Turk who advises his countrymen on how to deal with German bureaucracy.

Paradoxically enough, Gastarbeiter culture may have flowered just at the moment at which its natural audience is slipping away.

"The average Turkish family in Germany has a video recorder," says Anita Rehm, who works for the German television channel, ZDF, and has produced several films on the new immigrants. "When they come home, they slip in two or three cassettes, and that's their evening. Turkish theater just doesn't mean that much to them any more."

It was a criticism heard more than once at the Stuttgart theater festival Immigrant groups today tend to play largely for northern European audiences. But the exercise is not always fruitless. "We Germans need to see how the Gastarbeiter see us," says Schatz. "We have a lot to learn from them. It may turn out that they have more to tell us than we them."

East Africa's Most Elegant Hotel

by Alan Cowell

APUTO, Mozambique — The water, it is true, does not run hot, and at breakfast guests desirous of preserves or butter bring their own to the table, clutching them possessively in polyethylene bags.

But the Hotel Polana does, whatever else, have a style of its own, and a history, and, perhaps, an insight or two into what has happened to this strip of land on the Indian Ocean over the years.

The Polans is Mozambique's best hotel and, to aficionados, the most elegant in all East Africa, a place reflecting past splendor and present

Its great dazzle-white wings fan out over a garden of palms and plants and pool deck. The ocean breeze whispers its secrets to the swaying palm fronds high above the sunbathers. The elevator is a cage of rosewood and gilt that proceeds sedately through the hotel's four floors. And the dining room, stylistically, is somewhere between fin-de-siècle Lisbon and first-class European railroad station lounge, circa 1910. There is no a la carte menu: Mozambique's straitened circumstances do not permit such luxury. But there are prawns and beer at lunch time, beneath the parasols beside the pool — a hallowed tradition.

Over the years, the hotel has played host to spies and revolutionaries.

South African tourists and Soviet generals. Recently, too, there were other additions to the list that reflect Mozambique's international alliances: a North Korean martial arts team, clad in track suits, practicing homicidal ballet on the pampered smoothness of a lawnbowls green built for another era; and a cultural group of young female dancers from Soviet Uzbekistan, sporting bikinis by the poolside under the watchful gaze of large, unsmiling men in leather jackets whom any consumer of espionage tales would immediately recognize as vintage KGB, seen, that is, through Western eyes. At any rate, they were not

The hotel was built in the 1920s, in the days when Portugal ran Mozambique, after a fashion, and the alignment was with other colonial powers, not with Eastern Europe.

Initially, it had about 150 rooms, but now there are 210, including a newer section in which air conditioning replaces the ocean breeze for cooling. Some rooms compete with shoe boxes in dimensions, but that is a quibble born of the chrome-and-plastic age of hotel chains. There is no chrome or plastic here to detract from a vista of palms seen, as across a silk screen, through mosquito netting, which is a necessity, not a luxury. If Mozambique has moved from colony to Marxist independence, so the hotel has kept step. During World War II, it was, they say, a nest of spies, as was the metropolis, Lisbon. Agents of various powers spied variously on port movements, colonial officials and each other. Then came peace and, in neighboring South Africa, the formulation in 1948 of apartheid, the system by which races are kept separate - but not, pparently, as separate as the Afrikaner hierarchy had decreed. White South African men on vacations, it was said, shot through with a sense of the illicit, frequented the dockside bars of downtown Maputo. in quest of something that their politics and inclination at home forbade them. A South African group, Southern Suns, ran the hotel and the Polana stood in silent, stylish witness. That was until 1975, when the Mozambican revolution came. The hotel weathered that, too. The downtown bars were closed and many of the women were sent to re-education camps. The Portuguese, who had called the city Lourenço Marques, fled to Portugal and South Africa, and the South Africans

A workers' committee took over running - some would say not running — the hotel, reflecting the proletarian view of new rulers who had established their credentials as guerrilla fighters in the bush. And the hotel, today, reflects some of the ambivalences of that new style of The ruling party in Mozambique, Frelimo, is hierarchical in its approach and there is a certain exclusivity to its membership.

There is a kind of inherited, Portuguese sense of the formal in all things Mozambican, so that the Polana is not for nonresidents, Mozambicans or not. They are excluded. The masses do not come here, because the hotel has only a limited capacity to provide food and drink, but visiting delegations do, be they Uzbek dancers or their KGB chaper-

The itinerant traveler might find it difficult to take a room here but a delegation on official business will be housed, and that eventually will change because there are plans afoot to revamp the Polana, once a Portuguese group has completed a new, luxury hotel a little way off on the seafront, providing more beds.

Then the Polana will close for a while, walls will be removed so that small rooms are made into big ones, and then it will reopen. "The facade of the hotel, the spirit of it, will not be changed," said arepresentative of the Mozambique Tourist Board. And, as ever reflective of Mozambique's mixture of dogma and a kind of pragmatism, the renovations will be carried out by the Portuguese once the hated overlords for whom the Polana, and its way of life, were a symbol of supremacy.

Market for Specialized Chips Grows As Sales of Small Computers Boom

New YORK — The random-access memory chip, or RAM, has slaways been the biggest seller because it is such a standard product. Storing of data is common to all computers, and the same RAMs have been used both in giant mainframe computers and in tiny desktop ones. Moreover, one manufacturer's RAM has been interchangeable with another's Japanese companies hold about two-thirds of the world market for the contract generation of memory chip, the 64K RAM, and some U.S.

companies have had to drop out.

Now, however, different chips are being designed for different applications. This shift is expected to be more important in the next generation of chips, the 256K RAM, which is just starting to reach the market In the future, some chips will be best suited for small computers and others for large ones. Some will be designed for speed, such as in storing the information for rapidly changing video displays. Some will consume less power, for use in battery-powered portable computers. In short, a once giant market might have more niches for clever companies that have not had the sauscle to compete in the center

The once giant market might have more niches for clever companies that have not had the muscle to compete in the center arena.

"Think the market in general will be fractured," said Timothy Propeck, director of product marketing for Mostek Corp., a Texas semiconductor maker owned by United Technologies. "There will be

The main reason for the segmentation is the boom in personal computers. Five years ago, most memory chips were used in large computers. Now, more than half the memory chips are used in small business or home computers. Manufactures are thus starting to pay attention to the special design needs of small computers.

Organisation Is Different

- A RAM chip essentially consists of microscopic rooms, each containing one bit of information - a zero or a one. All 64K RAM chips contain about 64,000 such rooms (actually 65,536) and all 256K RAM chips contain about 256,000 (actually 262,144). But just as two buildings with the same number of rooms can be arranged differently, so can two chips be organized differently.

- Most chips have been designed so that each trip to the memory retrieves one bit. Computers, however, generally process at least 8 bits at a time, a quantity known as a byte. Instead of requiring eight trips to a chip to retrieve one byte, which would be impossibly slow, computer makers generally have eight memory chips working together, each contributing one bit to the byte.

A home computer with 16K bytes of memory, for instance, might contain eight 16K RAM's. The smallest computer that could use 64K RAM chips efficiently would be one with 64K bytes of memory, or eight

So chip makers, siming at the small-computer market, are designing chips in which more than one bit can be retrieved at once. Texas Instruments has designed a 64K chip that works like four 16Ks, with four bits retrieved at once. That allows two 64K chips to take the place of eight 16K's, saving space and cost.

Profit Increased

In addition to opening up new markets, Texas Instruments is reaping other benefits. Because it is a specialized chip, the company has been selling it for $5.50, about $1.50 more than standard chips, according to Daniel Kleskin, semiconductor analyst for Montgomery Securities in San Francisco. But because it does not cost much more to produce, "most of that premium flows straight to Tt's bottom line," he said.

Another area of competition will be in speed. The speed at which data can be retrieved is especially significant in such areas as high-resolution graphic displays, where the video screen has to be updated continuously.

Manufacturers are developing techniques that allow bits to roll off the chiral like bullets through a machine sun. chip like bullets through a machine gun.

Some manufacturers, like Intel Corp., are aiming for chips that use little electrical power. Indeed, Intel seems one of the companies most intent on pursuing niches and avoiding the main areas, where in the past there have been severe price wars and losses for most, if not all, of the

"This opens a different facet to the whole business," said Ronald J. Whittier, vice president and general manager of Intel's memory products

How many companies will be able to survive in such niches, however not clear. Many of the segments, for instance, are large enough in their own right that they will attract the major players.

"You're still dealing with big chunks of the market," said Fred Zieber of Dataquest, a market research firm. "It doesn't fracture the market in total. It just puts some big cracks in it."

Peugeot To Pursue Job Cuts

By John Vinocur New York Times Service

PARIS — Pengeot, the privately owned French automaker, said Thursday that it would attempt to can its work force by nearly 10 percent, a decision creating the ossibility of serious labor unrest and major policy difficulties for the Socialist government,

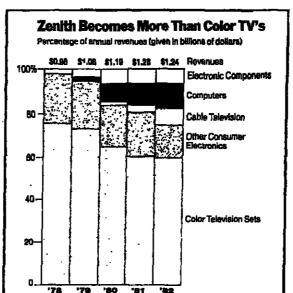

The announcement by the company, which says it has incurred losses of about 6 billion francs ($776 million) over the past three years, with an accumulation of a debt of about 28 billion francs ($3.5 billion), has been denounced by the Socialist Party as "the most radical possible solution." A Communist union leader accused the company of trying "to destabilize econom-cally and politically the management of the country.

André Sainjon, the union offi-cial, labeled the corporation the most reactionary element in French industry, actively collabo-rating with what he called "rightwing forces." His remarks contained the tacit accusation that Peugeot, through the cutbacks, sought to create unemployment threatening the future of the Social-

The cutbacks would affect 7,371 workers of the 81,700 employed by Peugeot and Automobiles Talbot, the subsidiary purchased by Peugeot as Chrysler-Simca in 1978 and subsequently renamed. In anticipa-tion of the amouncement, workers at a Talbot plant in the Paris suburb of Poissy went on strike Thursday morning for 24 hours. The reductions involve the dismissal of some workers and the chimination of other jobs through such procedures as early retirement. Union-management discussions, with the possibility of government intervention, are scheduled for August and September, with the first departures expected in October.

They are to come at a time when the government expects a general increase in unemployment as a re-sult of the deflationary policies it is following to combat inflation, stabilize the franc and reduce the trade defecit. Aides to President François Mitterrand have confided (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

Zenith Shifts Focus In Comeback Quest

By Michael Blumstein

New York Times Service NEW YORK - In the late 1970s, Zenith Radio Corp. was known as much for its crusade against Japanese imports as for its television sets. Lately, however, Wall Street analysts have been impressed because the company has abandoned that quixotic battle and refocused its energies on cutting manufacturing costs and capitalizing on its historically strong research efforts.

But just as Zemith's fortunes appeared to be on the rise, the company was shocked by the unexpected death Monday night of its chief executive, Revone W. Khuckman, who died of a heart attack after playing golf near Chicago.

Mr. Khuckman, who was 54, had joined Zenith as controller in 1967 and became president in 1977, chief executive in 1980 and

Analysts said Tuesday that Zenith's new strategy was well in place and expressed confidence that the company would continue its turnaround — if the economy expands, the electronics boom continues and inflation remains low.

Zenith last year had a $21.8-million loss on revenue of $1.2 billion, although it has reported profits in the first two quarters of Several analysts said that Zenith has sufficient manage depth to find a capable successor to Mr. Kluckman and to Walter C. Fisher, 64, the executive vice president for sales and marketing who temporarily succeeds Mr. Kluckman as chief executive under the company's bylaws. Mr. Khickman's tenure is expected to be short because he has already announced his retirement.

"It's like losing a father," said Charles Ryan, an analyst at Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith. "It's a lot different if you're 12 than if you're 45. In this case, it's more like being 45." As its name indicates, Zenith's roots were in radio. The company was incorporated in 1923 as a sales agent for the Chicago Radio Laboratory and ultimately became known as a manufacturer of high-quality radios. Afraid of offending radio dealers, Zenith resisted moving into television and did not sell its first receivers

But if it was slow off the mark, Zenith went on to become the (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

Schlumberger Profit Down in Quarter

NEW YORK (AP) — Schlumberger Ltd., a leading energy-services concern, said Thursday that its second-quarter profit fell 20 percent from year earlier on an 11 percent drop in revenue.

Schlumberger, which also has interests in electronics and oil field neasurement products, said earnings fell to $286.4 million, or 98 cents a there, from $356.3 million, or $1.21 a share, a year earlier. Revenue lipped to $1.43 billion from $1.61 billion.

For the first half of the year, Schlumberger's profit fell 23 percent to 3545.3 million, or $1.87 a share, from $710.6 million, or $2.42 a share, in he comparable 1982 period.

Conrail Reports 2d-Quarter Profit

PHILADELPHIA (AP) — Consolidated Rail Corp., citing improved fficiency and an improving economy, said its second-quarter profit rose 6 percent despite a 19-percent drop in revenue.

The revenue drop was primarily due to discontinuation of passenger ervice that it had provided in the second quarter of last year. Congress equired that Conrail end passenger service Jan. 1.

The company, known as Conrail, posted a profit of $97.2 million, or .3.66 a share, compared with a profit of $83.8 million, or $3.31 a share to reporters that they expect the new layoffs in a wide range of industrial sectors to increase the likihood of strikes, signaling, at a time of decreased purchasing power, the most tense period faced by the Socialist government since its election in May 1981.

Dealing with the situation at Pengeot also presents the governeat with a substantial ide dilemma. It is committed to its leftwing electorate to save jobs, but constantly restates the necessity for France to modernize its industries if they are to regain a competitive place on international markets. Carefully avoiding the Communist destabilization charges, Finance Minister Jacques Delors has instead offered ambignous comments on the possibilites of massive cutbacks, suggesting only that the govenment might, under certain cir-constances, offer Pengeot financial

Then the Japanese pushed into the U.S. market with low-cost sets, and by 1976 they had gotten more than 44 percent of the color-televi-sion market. And two years later, RCA, which had trailed Zenith in sales of television sets, pulled ahead of Zenith in domestic share, using price-cutting tactics. Zenith first began its complaints about the Japanese competition in 1968, contending that the Japanese were selling televisions below market value and that the Japanese severiment was subsidizing their sale, It was an argument that John J. Nevin, who became Zenith's sident in 1971 and chairman in 1976, continued to press widely.

But Zenith and other domestic producers had little luck convincing the U.S. government to stem the flow of Japanese sets. And it was not until 1977 that the Japanese, fearful of repercussions, agreed to a modest limit on their

To that end, the company moved the manufacture of its black-andwhite sets to Taiwan and its laborintensive color-television components and modules to Mexico. It has also closed several obsolete color-television assembly plants in Chicago, substituting an automat-ed plant in Springfield, Missouri.

The company has also added new products, including personal computers and high-resolution monitors or screens for computers, power converters for computers and "addressable" decoders, which let cable-television companies change a customer's service without entering the home.

By Richard Halloran

WASHINGTON - The Navy and Grumman Corp. have agreed that the aircraft maker, once threatened with interrupted production, will continue building F-14 lighters and A-6 bombers into the 1990s, according to congressional, Navy and industry officials.

The F-14 Tomcat is the Navy's premier fighter and the A-6 Intruder is its mainstay bomber. Together, the two were the source of more than half of last year's $2.1 billion in revenue for Grumman, of Bethpage, New York.

Officials said the agreement between Grumman and Navy Secretary John F. Lehman Jr. was scheduled to be presented to the Defense Resources Board for approval next

Just two months ago, the Navy Manned to shut down F-14 production for three years and A-6 production for two years while a new version of each plane was devel-oped. Then the Navy wanted to begin buying the new models and reworking older planes.
But in negotiations, the Grumman officials and their congressio nal supporters were able to persuade the Navy to continue sustained but limited production until the new versions are ready to

Grumman officials argued that a temporary shutdown of the assem-bly lines would have meant the layoff of several thousand workers, possibly the breakup of a network suppliers and subcontractors and high costs in starting up again. When the Navy began the F-14 program in 1969, a total purchase of 497 aircraft was planned. But

LUXEMBOURGEOISE	GOLD + COMPUTERS = PROFITS  We at West Star have developed a technical trading system especially for Gold futures. It is a day-trading system, and over the last six years its profits to losses have run approximately 60% to 40% in its favour, with the average profit for exceeding the overage loss. We have traded this system since mid-82 and have had some spectocular results. All trades have been documented and published each week in our market newsletter.  As a company we have invested heavily in modern computer technology, and use many powerful programmes to monitor all the major futures markets. Each week we publish the results of

NEW YORK (AP) - The Na-

The group said Wednesday that said the code will give corporate accountants guidelines for handling cases in which a potentially unethical situation might develop.

In most cases, the code advises

SULTANA

By Prince Michael of Greece. 438 pp. $16.95. Translated from the French by Alexis Ullmann.

Harper & Row: 10 East 53d Street, New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Charles Penyvesi

THE formative experience of displacement links Prince Michael of Greece — first cousin to King Constantine — and the heroine of his novel, "Sultana" An 18th-century Frenchwoman from Martinique captured by North African pirates and dispatched as a gift to the Turkish sultan. Année Dubuc ultimately rises to become Sultana Nakshioil. For both, Paris is the capital of civilization and Constantinople the headquarters of a barburous empire with which one is forced to make peace. Prince and sultana are both specialists in the caprice of fate that turns commoners into royalty and royalty into commoners.

In the past two centuries there has been enormous traffic in both directions. Not only did the four great empires of the Old World crash and fall apart — and such lords of the earth as the Romanoffs, Hohenzollerns, Hapsburgs and Ottomans become walking museum pieces — but an upstart called Napoleon crowned himself and grafted his brothers and sisters onto the ancient dynastic trees of Europe ope. That Aimee Dubuc, the favorite of 190 sultans and the stepmother of a third, was cousin to Josephine, Napoleon's first wife and empress, is a typically 19th century success story, proto-Hollywood pap: history as a chain of coincidences and politics as romance.

or connectences and pounes as rounnee.

Prince Michael is an analyst of politics and a gourmand of intrigue, and his novel is a guide to the corruption and violence in the court of a declining Moslem empire. There is no indication of where history stops and fiction begins.

The desires the book uses is that of a first. The device the book uses is that of a firstperson account by Aimte Nakshidil, and the narrative is neither the measured memoir of the 18th century, nor the self-expose of the 20th, but the formal prose spoken by antique dealers. The writer's main weakness is paychology. He does not quite deliver on his promise to explain what makes a young girl, durifully French and Catholic, turn into a devout concubine and an impassioned partisan of the Ottoman cause, egging a fatalistic court to action against the nefarious plots of England and Russia, as well as of France. "Sultana" offers a rare inside tour of the Ottoman court, for centuries called the Sub-lime Port. We learn that the executioner, busy cotting off and displaying and labeling the heads of rebels, is also the chief imperial gardener. "Here, the hangman is an artist," Prince Michael writes. "His functions consist of grow-ing flowers and cutting heads." The suitans themselves have a hereditary passion for Flowers — especially using and carnations.

Segregated into black and white units, esmuchs of the senigito are named after flowers. They are the government behind the government, they make and appearance of the series of the

they make and unmake sultans and unitana; and viciers.

Prince Michael calls "jealousy, stander, and concealed violence" the three pillurs of the haren. The sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops a handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops as handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops as handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops as handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops as handkerchief as a second of the sultan drops as a second sign of interest in a particular member of his barem, and some are never so becomed. Boredom is the rule there, and the women pass their days eating sweets, being bathed and oiled, and waiting for a turn on the saltan's velvet bedwanting for a turn on the samen's verter retrishers. Before conquering their favorite women, suitans are prone to cite poetry. In detailing her seduction, Année Nakahidil speaks of "the irresistible torspor" that overcame her. The "surge of shame" she felt had to do with the two old women who were also present in the two old women who were also present in the reen, "silently cronching."

The author knows his Orient: "At first sight the Orient bristles with laws and intercirctions; nothing seems possible. But that is only 3.7 appearance to deceive intrusive foreigners and fools. Behind this facade, insistence, ingenuty, and power elicit the most extravagant solutions tions, and everything becomes possible, even and especially the impossible."

Aimee Nakshidil is on the side of the modermizers, and the intrigues against her have to do as much with her preferment in the sultan's bed as with her politics. The French revolution of 1789 is distant thunder, the Turkish canaille is one stirred by Moslem fundamentalists. No one questions the sultan's hieratic supremacy. What unleashes the frenzy of the burner and the mosque is innovation and westermation. Nakshidil's beloved reformer, Saltan Seim, is deposed, imprisoned and eventually murdered, and his policies are canceled. Echoes of Telegraphics and the policies are canceled.

Prince Michael also offers glimpses, probably unintended, into the caste thinking of bly anintended, into the caste thinking of royalty: the tendency to divide people into loyalists and traitors, a preoccupation with the depth of bows, the size of retinues and the choice of signeties. There is passium in his descriptions of protocol and pageantry. But the clash of armies, the empire's retreat and the mob's rage are described in the impersonal terms of a cheek same. This is a novel that terms of a chess game. This is a movel that conveys the chill of royal lucidity.

McEnroe's Body? Or an Ad Racket?

NEW YORK - Dunlop, the English sporting goods manufacturer, has given John McEnroe a new promotional contract, a new racket and - in print, at least - a new body.

The advertising campaign for Dunlop's new 200G Max tennis racket features a curiously muscle-bound McEnroe posing with McEnroe will get all of a five-year, $3-million contract, but the body is only half his. The photo is a composite, and the bare, rippling chest is Ted Matia's.

Martia, a 22-year-old student at DeKalb College outside Atlan-1a, said he was paid $250 to model for a photo which was matched with one of McEnroe shot months earlier in New York. Matia, who is not a professional model, was invited to try out for the ad after he was spotted working out in a gymnasium. Photographers from several news magazines have dropped by to photograph Matia's 45-inch (114-centimeter) chest, 30-inch waist and 171/2-inch biceps, he said.

Dan Grieco, senior art director at the J. Walter Thompson Agency in Atlanta, said the muscular McEnroe campaign was designed to emphasize McForne's switch from a traditional wooden racket to one with a more powerful nylon and graphite frame

On Monday night, Sangster had outbid the sheikh in tying the record for a yearling sale. Last July at Keeneland, Sangster bid $4.25 million for a son of Nijinsky II, and the sheikh was the underbidder. Whatever the case, the colt will be sent to England for training under Michael Stoute, who saddled the sheikh's previous high purchase, a $3.3-million yearing named Shareef Dancer, to victory in the Irish Derby last month. The racing potential of his purchases is important, but the sheikh is also acquiring the foundation of what he hopes will be his own breeding empire. #### Padres 5, Cardinals 4

In St. Louis, Ruppert Jones hit a three-run home run in the ninth inning off Bruce Sutter to help San Diego end a five-game losing streak with a 5-4 victory over St. Louis. Expos 6, Reds 4

In Montreal, Al Oliver and Gary Carter hit run-scoring singles and Tim Wallach an RBI double during a three-run fifth inning that helped the Expos beat Cincinnati, 6-4.

Royals 14, Blue Jays 8

In the American League, in Toronto, the Blue Jays' ace, Dave Stieb, was beating Kansas City, 4-3, going into the seventh inning but after a hit and a walk, Stieb was gone and the Royals scored eight runs in the inning, going on to win,

Baltimore 4, Seattle 2 In Seattle, Dan Ford homered bunt for a base hit as Baltimore defeated the Mariners, 4-2, for its 10th victory in 11 games. Ford, who had been on the disabled list since June 22 after injuring his knee on June I, was activated earlier in Brewers 4. Rangers 3

In Milwaukee, Cecil Cooper led off the eighth with his 21st homer, enabling the Brewers to win the second. Wilson hit a 1-2 pitch into minth of their last 10 games, a 4-3 defeat of Texas. It was Cooper's 13th hit in 21 trips. He has 17 RBIs in his last nine games and his total of 73 leads the majors.

Red Sox 6, Angels 4

In Anaheim, California, Wade Boggs's two-run triple broke a minth-inning tie to give Boston a 6-4 victory over the Angels.

Yankees 6, Twins 4 In New York, Don Baylor's tworun homer off Ron Davis in the 10th inning enabled the Yankees to beat Minnesota, 6-4. "It was power against power," Baylor said of his confrontation with Davis (3-4), the Twins' third pitcher. "He's a power pitcher, and he tried to beat me with his best pitch, a fast ball. When you lose a ball game, you should lose it with your best pitch."

A's 9, Tigers 2

In Oakland, Dwayne Murphy broke a 2-2 tie with a two-run si three times, walked and beat out a gle, then Bill Almon clinched the game with a three-run homer during a six-run seventh inning, lifting the A's over Detroit, 9-2.

White Sox 8, indians 2 In Cleveland, Tom Paciorek and

Ron Kittle hit two-run homers in a five-run fifth inning as Chicago beat the Indians, 8-2. All of Chicago's starters got at least one hit; Paciorek and Mike Squires had

OBSERVER The Election Junkies

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK—Some people fall among thieves, rogues and real-estate speculators. They must lead exciting lives. Not me. I always seem to fall among people who are thinking about the next election, and I have fallen among a lot of them lately.

To most of us, probably, the next election is like Halley's comet. Inevitably, it will come around, and when it does, there will be an entertaining display, but right now not many of us sit around day and night talking of nothing else.

"Well, yes," the political junkies say, "but the next election is already under way." This is true. In the United States the next election is always under way. So is Halley's comet, but would you walk into a conversation about the pennant races and change the subject to Halley's comet by saying, "Halley's comet is already under way"?

Election addicts do this constantly. They can harass you for months about the monumentally uninteresting question of whether President Reagan will run again when the obvious answer is, "They almost always run again, but sometimes they fool you, and do you think the family is really dead?"

Over the years you notice a predictable course, as predictable as the movement of Halley's comet, in the progress of political junkies' conversation. Right now, for example, they are complaining that all the Democratic candidates are too unexciting" to win.

This is almost always what they say a year before the election when the first half dozen have announced they are in the running.

Later they will say that this or that development has destroyed the Republican or the Democratic Party, then that the public is demand-ing "a new face," then that the primaries are destroying the nation's political structure. When the campaign at last begins and the public at last gets interested, they will deplore "voter apathy."

Not that I would accuse any of the six Democrats - Askew, Cranston, Glenn, Hart, Hollings or Mondale — of being exciting. On the other hand, Ronald Reagan is no Teddy Roosevelt either. An old fellow who often doesn't know what he's talking about and needs four men named Baker, Clark, Gergen and Meese to do most of his work for him hardly seems much of a threat in an excitement competi-

Reagan's strength is not in being exciting, but in being charming. This comes from his ability to adapt his movie skills to political life. He moves gracefully, reads well in public, has a fetching grin and conveys a pleasant sense of modesty, like the characters he usually played for Warner Brothers.

This disarmingly modest manner seems to acknowledge to one and all that he is a man with much to be modest about. Dining with Jefferson, he would discuss movies; with Washington, horseback riding; with Theodore Roosevelt, his love of the West.

If there is not a great deal hap-pening in his head, he is, after all, only like the great majority of us, and he does not pretend to more.

The political junkies rendering their conventional judgment against the "unexciting" Demo-crats have it all wrong. Nowadays when television hocus-pocus is everything in presidential campaigns, it isn't Reagan's nonexistent power to excite that Democrats must contend against; it is Reagan's charm.

I assume there isn't a Democrat in the land who would want to compete with Reagan in a charm contest. There probably hasn't been a politician since Franklin Roosevelt who could have beaten him on these terms. So, if we amend the political junkies' judgment to read that the Democratic candidates are too "uncharming" to win, it follows that the Democrats should pick a candidate who will steer shy of charm's fatal temptation to play the swell guy. This, I suppose, would be a man of bluntness without much modesty, and a rather strained grin, who was willing to try to persuade the country that while charm is valuable in the ballroom it is not worth much in the Oval Office. Of course he should also stand for something Given a choice between charm and nothing, people will settle for charm every time, as Reagan's success illustrates.

A Burn Victim's Desperation

Dax Cowart Wanted to Die, but the Doctors Wouldn't Let Him

By Margaret Engel

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — Ten years ago, the life of Dax Cowart, 35, of Henderson, Texas, changed. A former Air Force pilot, high school athlete, golfer, surfer and rodeo rider, Cowart was working in his father's real estate business one July day when a propane gas leak on a property he and his father were appraising caused an explosion. The blast killed his father. It left Cowart blind, with his hearing impaired and with limited use of his arms. The burns disfigured his oncehandsome face and only one joint of one thumb remains on his Cowart spent 14 months after the explosion in excruciating pain, caused particularly by daily immersions to sterilize his burns. From his first communication with ambulance parademics, to doctors, ministers, nurses, as well as lawyers he hired against his family's wishes, Cowart insisted that he be allowed to leave the hospital and die.

"I didn't intend to die from infection, but intended to commit life and also to benefit the patient, suicide," Cowart said. "The But they're trying to benefit the ightmares and pain involved in the first few months were so bad, I can barely remember it myself. I couldn't tell what was really happening and what was a dream."

That year the American Medical Association endorsed the right of a competent patient to decide whether to continue life-prolonging treatment. But Cowart's wish was never granted.

After his hospital discharge, Cowart took some graduate courses in law and business, but dropped out because of his physical limitations. He married a high-school acquaintance in February, now runs a seasonal small business and directs a local Chamber of Commerce commit-every minute. I did not have very much use of my hands. I could not see to get things that I needed. Q: You said you felt a virtual prisoner of some of the doctors you worked with. Why do you think that they ignored your request to refuse treatment? A: The doctors knew that I ald not die from the injuries. I had a chance of being able to walk again. Their thinking, I'm sure, was that if they forced me to receive treatment, at some point I would want to live.

Q: Why were those motives

A: The motives weren't wrong. What was wrong was the actual forcing of me to undertake the treatment. I had full use of my mind. I demonstrated that I could think, that I could reason, that I had given it some thought. I knew I was burned bad enough, I didn't want to live. There's no way I wanted to go on as a blind and a Q: Why do you think helpless patients are put in this position? A: It's just a result of the doctors having the power. The doctors' interest has been to preserve patient on their own terms.

Q: How many operations did you go through?

A: I couldn't even count. I don't remember.

Q: Why did you want to die? A: Because of the extreme amount of pain. I had to undergo many painful procedures day after day after day. Every day seemed like a year. The passage of time was so slow. Also, I simply did not feel that the quality of life that I would have upon recovering would be such that I would

Q: How do you feel about that

A: In terms of how happy I am now, I have a very good quality of life. [But] there are many things that have happened every day that are just extremely frustrating. walking down to the store. Reading your mail. Reading the newspaper. It's a really sinking feeling. I've always been real independent. Now I have to rely on someone else to feed me - for all my private functions. Things like that are very frustrating.

Q: Frustration, however, is dift from not being able to do it at all. Do you still wish you had

A: I don't know how anyone can say — at least I can't — that it's worth it. The best way I know how to answer that question is that I have had some very, very good experiences and happy experiences that I of course wou not have had if I had died. My contention is that I should have been the one to make that choice at that time. And if I had made that choice I would have refused

Q: Is the point you're trying to make that nothing in your later life can be traded off with what you

A: Yeah. If it happened again tomorrow, would I still do the same thing? I know that definitely the answer is yes. If I were burne again today? Had to go through this again but at the end of the road 10 years from now, I know it's going to be worth it? Knowing that, would I make a different decision? The answer is no.

Q: Is your wife ever insuited when you say that you wish you had been allowed to die?

A: I don't think she's insulted. Someone might think that it cast a reflection on her, but it's not. I am happy now. I think what you're thinking is what many neople say - well doesn't the fact that I am happy now and I am enjoying life, doesn't that mean that the doctors did the right thing in forcing me to receive treatment?

Q: And how do you answer A: Well, it's not

A: Once about two years after I was released from the hospital l took a large overdose of tranquilizers and sleeping medications, anything I could find Slashing my wrists, taking aspirin before-hand. Unsuccessful with that, too. Q: Do you think that you would try to take your life in the future?
A: No, I don't think so.

Q: You've spent long hours reflecting on your fate and your life. Do you have a vision of what constitutes a housen life? Has it changed your views on death?

A: People who are terminally ill, today it is insane for anyone to require that person to unde zo cancer chemotherapy or whatever if that is not that person's wishes. What we're doing is not preserv-ing life we're really just drawing out the cying process. If any given patient wants to receive whatever treatment's available, I think that
